Abstract: Marketers are mainly concerned with tactics, which is followed by concern investment. Currently tactics have moved lower in priority and the return on investment is the main concern. There is no concern about if the social media works or not. It's not the issue on chats now because Viral marketing campaigns having online presence have give birth to the jargon “Go viral”. This includes non-interactive media like videos, podcasts, articles or blog posts, as well as interactive content like tools, web-based games. However, the most viral type of campaign is an idea of a virus that is divorced from its original media and spreads by discussion. Individual contents can be viral content, while the concept of the content genre is a meme people talk about them and make their own rather than refer or link to one specific instance. The first step for going viral is to design strategy for marketers interested in creating a viral promotion. There are certain challenges like business goals which leads to lead of business the effective way to find potential target audience and then define a way/medium to reach those potential buyers. In the research here Researcher tried to analyze how marketers use social media to market, promote and grow their businesses. It will be of help to marketers who are just starting to build on Social media or seeking support on it. It also compares other tools used to gain business. The research lays emphasis on how B2B and B2C is using affiliate programs to promote their brand. Design and develop strategy for displaying logo along with relevant information on thousands of sites for free which creates a viral world.

I. Introduction

Viral marketing and viral advertising are buzzwords referring to marketing techniques that use pre-existing social networks increases brand awareness through self-duplicating viral processes, that is, analogous like virus / computer viruses. It can be word-of-mouth delivered and getting escalated by the various effects on Internet. It can be done in the form of video clips, interactive Flash games, adv-games, e-books, brandable software’s, images, or even text messages.

The main task of marketers is to know such people who generally do social networking and create viral messages that can generate interest in such target customers which would help in generating the WOM. This technique is also quiet similar to stealth marketing campaigns—the unscrupulous use of astro-turfing which is on net and combined along with such techniques that market in store to create environment of WOM.

Social media marketing has been recent upgrade to integrated marketing communications. It is a principle that organization’s follow to reach their target markets. It coordinates and mixes the various elements of promotional mix, advertising, personal selling, public relations, publicity, direct marketing, and sales promotion. Viral marketing campaigns also form a part of this integrated group. As a part of traditional marketing communication, various parts—content, frequency, timing, and medium of communications are in collaboration with plans of advertising collaborating with marketing research that then decides the plans for public relations.

Social media's main aim is to maintain such data that people would be interested and would get attracted to generate WOM. Generally WOM is maintained when the data is created by a person trusted in the network and also then spreads faster compared to others. Anyone can login to Social Media from anywhere irrespective of location. Due to better interaction with target customers, the organizations are able to cater to needs of that target. The overall cost being low for the same. In the past two years, a number of marketers have experimented with social media by hiring an intern to simply set up a Face book fan page or establish a Twitter account. In 2013, however, the experimentation phase is over and social media is ready for prime time. A March further more, social media is increasingly being used by both B2B and B2C marketers. Although B2B has lagged B2C, it is catching up and innovating new applications of social media. Both B2B and B2C businesses are using social media to engage with their customers for:

- Influence – increase and drive awareness
- Customer Acquisition – drive sales of products and services

Companies generally utilize Social tools like face book, to connect to the consumers regularly and get their views and feedbacks on company’s performance, wherein two-thirds of IT company follow. Higher then 50% IT companies are regular on networking sites and blogs.

Usage of latest Technologies and Trends does impact Social Media Plan’ success. Nearly half of companies who’ve used social media for their events, report that following the event, their company tracks or reports metrics related specifically to the use of social media as a marketing tool.

V. Discussion/Conclusion

Organizations Having proper Planning for Social Media

Some of the marketers surveyed said, around 41% of Organizations have a properly and strategically designed Social media Marketing plan. Among the rest of the Marketers from the 78% who use Social Media, organizations had no plans defined for utilizing Social Media effectively.

Parts of Organization Involved in Social Media Plan

Marketers surveyed said marketing activities were the major chunk of the Social media planning and hence the team taking care of it as a whole was also marketing team of the organizations(almost around 71% had this view) . Almost around 83% of surveyed marketers said PR was also a good part of the social plan, whereas quiet a 55% expressed having concern on sales acts and hence including it in Social media plan.

Having no Social Media Planning

Most marketers who expressed that their organization didn’t have any such social media plan for marketing, also expressed that they did realize the need of one(almost around 80%) . Marketers said that most companies have a closed and a kind of cohesive marketing program and hence they fail to integrate Social Elements into it.

VI. Trouble with Employee Migration to Social Technology

Majority of marketers said that though their company has a proper social media plan in place, employees are not updated about it with any details, which leads to giving incorrect information to customers. Main teams taking part in Social Media transition is marketing team and PR team.

Maximum of the organizations do not have a detailed plan in written mode or do not have any particular metrics tracked for success evaluation, which adversely affects the business reputation and its survival. Organizations should necessarily plan in a way that incorporates all effective teams in designing the social media plan. They should always keep employees updated on recent social media activities so that they are proactive rather reactive when need arises. It also helps in generating confidence in employees as well as communicating at proper levels with consumer.
